FOODS MADE FROM SOY BEANS FORM NOVEL MEAL

The edible soya beans and soya products are very versatile in family meals these days. This fact was proved at a novel all soya bean luncheon given recently by Mrs. D. S. Hunt and Mrs. L. Lumpkin in the latter's home in Mokena.

The menu consisted mainly of foods made from soya beans and related products. The purpose of the luncheon was to show members of the Mokena-Frankfort home bureau unit how tasty and attractive the new food can be.

The menu included seasoned tomato juice, soya sandwich filling on crax, baked soya beans, meat loaf (ground cooked soya beans used as an extender), tossed salad (using soya bean sprouts), muffins (made with part soya flour), butter, jam and relishes, applesauce cake (made with part soya flour), coffee, nut cups containing salted soya.

Hostesses pointed out that soya beans are an excellent meat alternative. Although the protein in them is not comparable to protein in meat nevertheless it surpasses other vegetable sources such as navy or lima beans.

To most homemakers, soya beans are new, but the Chinese have eaten them for centuries. They called them the boneless steak. There are 500 varieties of edible soya beans, and many of these are being grown in Will county. The edible beans differ from the field soy beans in that they have a more mild flavor and they cook much quicker.

Home Bureau units throughout the county have studied the uses of the edible soya beans during the months of October and November. Additional material on this subject may be obtained from the Will county home bureau office.

WORSHIP VISITATION WEEK IN TINLEY PARK AND MOKENA METH. CHURCHES

This week 28 visitors in Tinley need of the worship of God in the sanctuary.

Last week, J. Frank Anderson, the pastor of the Tinley Park and Mokena Methodist churches, sent a letter to all the members and friends emphasizing the values and Park and 10 visitors in Mokena are calling upon these homes with personal invitations for entire families to attend the worship services, regularly. These visitors leave at each home a leaflet, by Roy L. Smith, the Editor of the church paper, The Christian Advocate. The title of this leaflet is: Church Pews: Slightly Used. In it the author explains why some church pews are slightly used.

While the visitation was planned to encourage regular worship, it also is a good preparation for the Christmas observance in both of the churches.

Along with other musical features the great Christmas hymns in the services each Sunday through Christmas will be sung. And the pastor will preach three successive Sundays, Christmas sermons from the text St. Luke 4:18 and in the fourth Sunday on the Christmas story, St. Luke 2:14. The service at Mokena will be at 9:15 a.m. and in Tinley Park at 10:45 a.m. Why not have a full house in all these services that we may the better appreciate the Advent of the Christ and adjust our lives to Him, the pastor asks.

Dead Fish Bites New Lenox Man

Former Mokena man receives considerable publicity, according to an item appearing in the Rock Island Digest, South Town Economist Chicago Tribune etc.

Believe it or not, Mr. Theodore Zusag of New Lenox employed in the Division Freight Office of the Rock Island Railroad at Englewood was actually bit by a dead fish given him by Mr. Harold C. Van Gordon of the freight traffic department of that railroad. Ted, being a family man, had gathered the children around him so that they might watch him clean the fish. It seems that when Ted opened the fish's mouth to show the kids what big teeth it had, his hand slipped and the fish's mouth banged shut on his finger, resulting in the application of bandages. Ted's reaction for the moment could only be printed appropriately in purple ink.

All his friends enjoy seeing him make the papers especially in a case of this kind as it reminds you of the old saying "When a man bites dog that's news".

MISS ELEANOR GINDER AND ORVILLE YUNKER MARRIED IN MOKENA

Miss Eleanor L. Ginder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Ginder of Mokena, formerly of Boone, Iowa was united in marriage to Mr. Orville G. Yunker, son of Mrs. Rose Yunker of Mokena in St. John's Evangelical church in Mokena at 2:30 o'clock Friday afternoon November 24 with the pastor Rev. Wm. Reimann officiating. The double ring ceremony was used.

The church was beautifully decorated with palms and flowers.

The bride who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white satin gown with a form fitting bodice, and full net lace skirt with a long train. A finger tip veil was held in place with a flowered head piece which was worn by her mother on her wedding day 40 years ago.

The bride carried a bouquet of white roses and carnations with white ribbon streamers.

Mrs. Florence Funk, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor and Miss Marie Yunker cousin of the groom, as bridesmaid, were both dressed in blue chiffon dresses made in princess style with lace trimmings and a head dress of blue feathers. Their bouquets were pink roses and carnations.

Little JoAnn Ginder, niece of the bride was flower girl. She wore a blue taffeta gown with a lace hat to match and carried a basket of flowers. The ring bearer, Geo. Allen Ginder, nephew of the bride, wore a white satin blouse with blue trousers and carried the ring on a white satin pillow.

The groom's attendants were his brother Mr. Earl Yunker and Mr. John Funk, brother in law of the bride.

Mrs. Donald Maue played the wedding march and also accompanied Mrs. Alma Steen on the organ. She sang "I Love You Truly" and "Because."

Adam and Geo. Ginder were ushers. The brides mother wore a wine colored dress with matching accessories and the groom's mother wore brown with gold trimmings. Gold pom poms and white carnations formed the corsage of both.

A large group of relatives and friends attended the service.

Following the wedding a sumptuous turkey dinner was served in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Neils Damgaard, east of Mokena to the wedding party. The dining table was decorated with flowers, and candles.

Capt. August Braun led his Smokers to a sweeping three game victory over the hapless Mokena Oilers. By taking three games, the Smokers increased their lead to two games over the V-Eighters. Capt. "Gus", Ed. Walsh and Harold Miller were the big guns on the attack as they subdued the Oilers.

The V-Eighters continued their onslaught as they won two games from the Robins and were only halted because Al Hentch stepped out in the last game with five strikes in a row for a 201 game and helped the Robins win the last game from the fast stepping speeders. "Ham" Hamilton and Vern Haag were the big wheelers for the V-Eighters.

HEARING ON DRAINAGE QUESTION UP IN FEBRUARY

About a year ago a petition was filed by a number of land owners asking for the organization of a special drainage district in the townships of Green Garden, Wilton, Peotone, and Manhattan for the purpose of deepening and widening Mud creek.

The matter came up for hearing on November 19, 1943 and at that time eight of the petitioners filed a written request for leave to withdraw their names from the petition. The Court granted this request and the attorneys for the petitioners then announced to the Court that the petition did not contain a sufficient number of signatures and asked that they be given leave to dismiss the petition and to assess costs against all the petitioners including those who withdrew their names.

The Court set this motion down for hearing on February 7, 1944 at which time the petitioners filed a motion asking that they be allowed to withdraw their oral motion dismissing the case and that they be given permission to amend their petition. The Court allowed the motion to withdraw the oral motion dismissing the suit but denied the right to amend the petition. An appeal was taken from this portion of the order denying the right to amend.

The Supreme Court said that the effect of the order of dismissal entered on motion of petitioners attorney was the controlling question and the order of dismissal was a voluntary nonsuit and where a voluntary nonsuit was taken the Trial Court had no power to set aside the order of dismissal and to reinstate the case giving as the reason that if the Plaintiff deliberately dismisses his suit he must have anticipated the results of such action and should not be restored to the rights which he voluntarily abandoned. Having taken a nonsuit his only recourse was to start anew. The Court did not pass upon the right to amend a petition because the nonsuit having ended the case there was nothing further for the Court to consider.

The Supreme Court directed that all proceedings in the case subsequent to the order of dismissal except with reference to the taxation of cost against those petitioners whose names were withdrawn from the petition were beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. The case having been voluntarily dismissed the jurisdiction of the Court ended with the entry of the order of dismissal and it was wholly without power to enter the order from which this appeal was taken.

The order entered by Judge Glen L. Cowing was reversed and the case remanded with directions to vacate all orders entered subsequent to the order of dismissal.

The petitioners were represented by Albert H. Krusemark Sr. the objectors by John H. Beckers of Kankakee, Herbert P. Folkers and J. Hinton Massey of Joliet.

WHAT was the best ball game ever pitched, when you consider the combined quality of pitching on both sides? This query came up recently when we were wishing good luck to such war-zone travelers as Carl Hubbell, Mel Ott, Ducky Medwick, Dixie Walker, Paul Warner and Paul Derringer. None of them went back far enough to offer any complete check on the intricate situation. The only candidate for the honor present was Carl Hubbell, one of the great pitchers of all time who innocently became involved in the argument.

As I figure it, there were three such games that belong in one compact and select group. The first took place in 1908 when Addie Joss of Cleveland beat Ed Walsh of the Chicago White Sox 1 to 0. In this game lean and lanky Joss, a great pitcher badly overlooked, pitched one of the few perfect games in baseball. Not a White Sox reached first base.

Against this flawless exhibition Ed Walsh struck out 15 Cleveland hitters and allowed only two hits. And in those now forgotten days Cleveland had a mighty slugging team headed by Nap Lajoie.

No-Hit Game

This was a pitching thriller that none who saw it will ever forget. I was talking about this game recently with Charley Hughes of the Detroit Athletic club who also covered the big-arm contest. "That game is my pick," Charley said. "Except for one wild throw, neither team would have scored against Joss and Walsh before nightfall. There is no greater thrill than to see a perfect game pitched—no one to reach first—especially when the other pitcher is allowing only two hits and fanning 15 men."

The next all-star double pitching entry we recall was the meeting between Fred Toney of Cincinnati and big Vaughn of the Cubs on May 2, 1917. In that game these two pitchers turned in a double exhibition that has never been equalled. At the end of nine innings neither had allowed a hit.

A double no-hit game in one afternoon was something for the record. No-hit nine inning games are rare enough and when you get two pitchers offering the same fare on a single occasion, you get close to the limit.

"What about the game," Mel asked, "that Carl Hubbell pitched against the hard-hitting Cardinals July 2, 1933?"

Hurling 18 Innings

Hubbell promptly blushed. "I'll tell you about it," Ott said. "Carl beat the Cardinals one to nothing after 18 innings. Tex Carleton worked the first 15 innings for the Cardinals and Jess Haines the last 3. They also pitched great ball. You have to, allowing only one run in 18 innings."

"But that isn't all of it. If you pitched perfect ball through 18 innings, only 54 men would come to bat. Well, as I recall it, only 57 men came to bat against Carl that day. Maybe only 56. Now it's great to pitch 9 fine innings. But think what it means to pitch 18 great innings."

"How about it, Carl?" I asked. Carl changed the subject slightly. "The best game I ever pitched was against the Dodgers," he said. "That was Memorial day, 1940. They got one hit, but that day I had most of my stuff working."

"Better than your 18 inning game and your no-hitter?" I asked. "I think so," he said. "But that 18 inning thing was a long afternoon."

"Here's a funny angle," Mel Ott said again. "Later on we beat Dizzy Dean and the Cardinals one to nothing in the second game that same day—27 runless innings for the Cardinals."

Anyway, we have offered you three of the greatest pitching contests of all time, slipping on back a mere matter of 36 years. There they stand on their own records—

The Joss-Walsh gem of 1908.
The Toney-Vaughn jewel of 1917.
The Hubbell-Carleton-Haines masterpiece of 1933, 18 innings

It would be interesting to get a vote from those who follow baseball as to which was the top masterpiece of the three.

All Around Fighters

How many know that in addition to football ability this navy team has set a new record in the way of fighting or boxing talent?

Here they are—Capt. Ben Chase, guard, was the regimental heavyweight champion in 1943 and the runner-up in 1944. Leo Bramlett, crack end, is heavyweight champion of the academy.

Clyde Scott, from Arkansas, won the middleweight championship of the Plebe summer tournament.

Winter Is the Time to Take Farm Inventory

Repairs, Ordering of Supplies Are Winter Jobs

Farmers may not be certain, yet, as to how much of one or another of their crops they will plant. They may still be calculating the probable effect of a drop in the numbers of their cattle or hogs or chickens. They know what they will be doing on those long winter days and nights before the ground can be prepared for seeding.

Winter on a farm is the time for making repairs—loose boards in the farm floor, that ladder rung that's always uncertain, extra handrails where needed, fence jobs, chicken houses, pig pens, smoke house, milking equipment, and the many little things that always need to be done in the home.

Machinery needs attention, too, while it rests before the big spring push. Oiling, painting, replacement of worn-out parts, and a general going over to be sure everything is ready mean more to the farmer's ultimate production job than he may realize, WFA points out. Doing this work in the slack season makes breakdowns far less likely at a time when they would seriously hinder the business of getting land plowed and crops planted.

By getting these things done when he has the time along with many others that are a necessary part of keeping a farm in good working order, the farmer will find his production job running more smoothly and steadily throughout the year, even with another labor shortage promised for next year.

Drying Mushrooms

Dried mushrooms offer a chance for the farm child or farm wife to supplement the "egg money."

Types of mushrooms cultivated in the United States have not proven satisfactory for dehydration, and for this reason dried mushrooms sold in the United States have been imported.

The wild varieties have proven satisfactory for drying. They can be successfully dried by being placed on wire trays, one layer deep, and having a rapid current of warm dry air passed over them. The same equipment used for other dehydration will prove satisfactory.

Many, who live near wild mushroom patches, might be able to gather far more than needed for immediate consumption. When thoroughly dried they will keep in good condition for several years. They can be sold dry to stores or restaurants or kept for winter home use.

Tuberculosis Culls

Many older hens are carriers of tuberculosis, and if they are housed in winter with the pullets they can spread the disease to the younger stock. Dr. P. C. Neuzil of the American Veterinary Medical association points out in recommending that old hens be culled out of the flock.

In some areas 50 per cent of the poultry flocks are affected by this disease and tests show that older birds are the principal carriers.

Pig Weaning Rules

Pigs should be weaned at about eight weeks of age to allow for re-breeding of sow. The sow's feed should be reduced a few days before weaning time to prevent udder trouble. As the milk flow will continue, the practice of weaning a few pigs at a time is not advisable as the udders not used will become caked and hard. When the udder becomes hard and caked, the pigs may be returned for a few minutes each day until the trouble is corrected.

Tales of the Town:

This story has never been printed before, we are told . . . How Vice President Henry Wallace scared his staff during the Chicago convention.

He left word that he was not to be awakened until 8 a. m. . . . His secretary rapped on the connecting door and, getting no answer, opened it and looked in. . . . He was alarmed to see two boys asleep in the twin beds. . . . The secretary hastened to spread the alarm. . . . He finally located the Vice President in the lobby reading a book. . . . Wallace explained. . . . At 3 in the morning two soldiers had knocked on his door while looking for someone else. . . . He learned they had no accommodations. . . . He insisted they take his room. . . . Then he dressed, went downstairs, and sat up all night reading.

Lieut. Col. James Roosevelt is supposed to have told this to friends. . . . He had just returned after considerable action in the South Pacific when he was stuck on a coast highway. He started to walk back to his camp. . . . Along came an army truck. . . . Colonel Roosevelt, using the hitch-hiker's thumb sign, stopped it. . . . The Sergeant driving it welcomed him for a lift. . . . He didn't recognize the President's son and started griping about his luck. . . . "Colonel," he said, "it sure is tough that two fighting men like us can't get into the Big Show, instead of motoring along a peaceful highway like this."

"Yes, it is," said Roosevelt's boy, "but orders is orders!" "Yeah," said the Sarge, "the trouble with men like us, Colonel, is that we don't know the right people."

Most of Wall Street has been keeping a watchful eye lately on the Fisher Brothers, who are prominent in the automobile industry. . . . One of the Fishers was motoring through Manhattan's industrial area recently, when a tire on his car blew. . . . He stopped near a small factory where he went looking for a phone. . . . He went to several places looking for a booth and was recognized by the owners of small plants in the neighborhood. . . . The eyes of these excited minor tycoons popped as they saw him. . . . "He must," they reasoned, "be inspecting one of the factories!" . . . And that is why the stock of a relatively minor company jumped 2½ points.

The epidemic of suicides (who have been "committing sidewalk") was stopped by a newspaper photographer. . . . A woman frantically telephoned a newspaper and said that her girl friend (who lived around the corner from the paper) had just phoned that she was going to jump from her window. . . . "Please," she urged, "do something to stop her!" . . . The editor assigned a photographer to the scene. . . . Instead of phoning the police, this hard-boiled photogger (thinking only of getting a good picture) talked his way into an apartment across the street and got his big camera ready. . . . The would-be suicide climbed out on the ledge. . . . Just as she was about to jump, he yelled: "Make it good, lady. I gotta make a living! Go ahead!" . . . She was so furious at this "invasion of her privacy" she climbed back inside and changed her mind about the whole thing.

And you think you have it tough, huh? . . . Along Melody Lane he is rated as a kid with a real future. . . . Before he was drafted into the Army he was the conductor of the New York City Symphony. . . . And so the Brain Trusters in khaki made him a band leader. . . . The last time he was home on leave he was guest conductor of that august group of long hairs when they held their concert at Carnegie Hall. . . . When he returned to camp he was summoned by the C.O. and handed the bawling out of his life. . . . Because he failed to make a satisfactory marching arrangement of the waltz: "Carolina Moon."

Intimates will tell you that they are beyond hope of reconciliation. They no longer speak to each other or look at each other without glaring. . . . He is well known in the theater and so is she. . . . They decided on an eventual divorce about a year ago. . . . But because of the exasperating apartment shortage both refuse to move out for each other. . . . They are keeping their estranged interlude as much to themselves as possible—just so they can have a place to sleep!

The Broadway Express: Col. Elliott Roosevelt will marry into a publishing clan which bitterly opposed his pop's re-election. . . . FDR's first public appearance (since the welcome home parade) will be in Washington within 4 weeks and not at the Gridiron Dinner. . . . The buzz persists that Steve Early, FDR's press chief, will resign after the Inaugural—to make a decent living. . . . James Wechsler, the brilliant Washington newspaper man, predicted Dewey's electoral vote closer than anyone.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Add ordinary cow's milk to the possible sources for rubber. Chemists, it recently was announced, have developed a product from milk which has the characteristics of natural rubber.

When the rubber tapper goes into the South American forests to work, he requires about 100 items of equipment and some 40 different items of food. And they say life in the rubber jungle is simple!

Test fleets of motor vehicles are driven 150,000 vehicle miles a day to develop "bugs" in synthetic tire construction. That mileage is about six times around the earth.

Dear Folks: The candy came a few days ago, and as usual it didn't last very long. The boys here, including myself, sure appreciate a good piece of candy. Life here goes on as usual and after nearly two years on this rock I wonder how much longer? Maybe one of these days I will get my travelling orders and then the chance to see how New Lenox township has changed since I last saw it.

It's still a tough war out here, and my brother Ray is now headed for the Philippines. When he comes back he will have a better story to tell. Thanks very much for remembering me. A Merry Christmas to you all.

Yours respectfully,
Edw. Brodsky, MAM 1-c

Keep Milk Production Up in Winter Weather with a

STOCK TANK WATER HEATER

Another type of water heater is this combination hog and cattle waterer used in connection with the pressure water system on the Levi Loder farm near Bradford.

Together with other modern electric equipment, stock tank water heaters are helping Northern Illinois Farmers in their big war job--feeding America.

It's a well-known fact that milk production falls off during cold snaps. One important reason: Cows are reluctant to drink cold or chilled water. Since milk is about 87% water, it is easy to see why cows give less when they drink less.

By using a Stock Tank Water Heater, water can be kept at a drinkable temperature all winter long. There are several types of tank heaters (some farmers have even made their own) that prevent water from freezing, take the icy chill out of it, and thus encourage animals to drink more often and more fully of the water that makes milk, fattens livestock.

Take a tip from the Red Top Farm, keep a constant supply of fresh, pure water available to your herd at all times... and keep it at a drinkable temperature during the cold months with a Stock Tank Water Heater. It's one of the best ways to keep livestock production rising when the temperature is falling.

159th and Wolf Road News
By Mrs. Robert Roth

The regular meeting of Dist. 137 PTA was held Tuesday evening at the school. Business consisted of organizing a unit of books for the library while word of approval is awaiting the order of the health scale which should arrive soon. Refreshments were served under the auspices of Mr. Chas. Doctor, Mrs. Winifred McKean and Mrs. Mary Morris.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Stewart and family, spent Thanksgiving at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Dempsey and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Roth of Homewood spent Thanksgiving with their son Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Roth and family.

A belated Thanksgiving celebration was enjoyed at the home of Mrs. Mabel Prust, Saturday evening Nov. 25 in Chicago. Mrs. Prust is the mother of Mrs. Robt. Roth, who attended with her husband and family, also Mrs. Prust's mother, Mrs. Geo. Williams of Chicago, her sister and family Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Creghton and children Ann Elizabeth and Kathleen of Milwaukee, Wis., and her son and family Mr. and Mrs. Ormel Prust and children of Palatine, Ill. Represented were six great, great grand children, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Roth and children of Mr. and Mrs. Ormel Prust.

Mr. and Mrs. Einar Johnson had Thanksgiving dinner with their daughter in law Mrs. Harry Johnson of Chicago.

Master Jackie Dempsey of Chicago will spend a week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Stewart and family during the illness of his baby brother, George Jr. Dempsey is suffering with an acute attack of stomach flu.

Mr. and Mrs. James Biddle and family of Joliet, spent Thanksgiving evening with Mr. and Mrs. Burton Reiter and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Yeager and family entertained the latter's mother, Mrs. F. LaHever Thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. John McKean and family entertained Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Anderson and children, Dickie and Shirley of Columbus Manor. Thanksgiving evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cheney and sons, Wm. Jr., and Chas., had dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Burton Reiter last Sunday.

Chas. Doctor, more affectionately known to his friends and neighbors as Grandpa, braved the elements of chance and the proximity of winter last Friday by embarking upon a fishing trip. Arriving at the place where the "big ones" are, he was mortified to find only sea gulls and water cranes sitting on the ice. As Grandpa says, "how can a fellow fish in that kind of water?" Better luck next time Grandpa, and in the meantime, let's just sit by the fireside until the ice melts and perhaps some of us will join you for a real day of fishing. But so much for fun, for a more important and most serious note is struck in the announcement of the appointment of Mr. Chas. Doctor and his niece, Miss Dorothy Tilsy, as representatives in this district for the 6th War Loan Bond Drive.

Americans all, we are united as one in our efforts to bring about an early peace and welcome our boys back home. This can only be accomplished by the continuous and untiring efforts of those of us who comprise the home front. Victory after victory is unfailing proof that the boys will not let us down, how then, could we fail for even a moment to neglect our obligations to them. Remember, the boys are giving their lives, you are asked only to lend your money.

CABINET CLEAN-OUT?

WASHINGTON.—Those around the White House say that this time the President really means business when it comes to cleaning out his Cabinet. Of course, this word has been passed out so often that some intimates are keeping their fingers crossed.

However, it is a fact that Roosevelt is now faced with some situations he cannot escape, other situations which have made him sore. In the former category is Cordell Hull's health. In the latter category is Jesse Jones. As a result, various names have been put in the White House Cabinet hopper and are being examined carefully.

Here are some of the names which may feature in the new cabinet.

Secretary of Commerce—Marriner Eccles, now chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; or Leon Henderson; or Chester Bowles, now OPA administrator; or Beardsley Ruml, author of the Ruml tax plan and considered a liberal big-business man.

Secretary of Labor—Dan Tobin, head of the teamsters' union; or John Winant, now Ambassador to London and former head of the International Labor Office. Winant, however, would prefer to be Secretary of State. Tobin, if appointed, is about the only AFL leader who would be acceptable to the CIO.

Postmaster General—Robert Hannegan. Frank Walker, now Postmaster General, believes that the Democratic national chairman should also be Postmaster and, being a retiring person anyway, Walker is ready to step out.

Secretary of Agriculture—Roosevelt is hoping to persuade Henry Wallace to take this job again. If not, Wallace will be offered the ambassadorship to Moscow, considered vitally important, or chairmanship of the international food organization. Roosevelt feels that it would be difficult politically to make Wallace Secretary of State because of opposition from Hull and Senate reactionaries.

Secretary of State—Ex-Justice Jimmy Byrnes or Ambassador Winant. Appointment of Byrnes would smooth things down for Hull, who isn't anxious to resign even though in the hospital. Hull would kick like a mule if Sumner Welles or Wallace were to succeed him. Byrnes also gets along well with Senate Foreign Relations chairman Tom Connally and other reactionaries.

Secretary of the Interior—Harold Ickes.

Attorney General—Francis Biddle. Roosevelt will not accept either Biddle's or Ickes' resignation. They were his top campaign speakers.

NOTE—After FDR defeated Willkie in 1940, Miss Perkins submitted her resignation. Her letter has been in the White House files since January 15, 1941. The President never acted on it.

KAISER'S MERCHANT FLEET
Demon ship-builder Henry Kaiser thinks he has found an answer to the burning question of how he can use some of the great fleet of merchant ships he has built, and still keep on building more after the war.

Kaiser plans to enter competition with the West Coast shipping lines, set up his own shipping business, try to emphasize smart salesmanship, cheap freight rates, mass orders. He says his only hope is a free and open market in the Orient, thinks he can do a more efficient job of shipping both to and from the Far East than a lot of old-line companies.

NAVY DEPT. RESHUFFLE
Secretary of the Navy Forrestal finally has devised a plan to elevate his old Wall Street friend, Struve Hensel, to the job of Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He has been wanting to do it for a long time, but there were too many Wall Streeters running the Navy to add any more.

Here is the new solution. You can write it down as definite that able John Sullivan, now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, will become Undersecretary of the Navy around January 1. A New Hampshire Democrat and no banker, Sullivan will replace Republican banker Ralph Bard, who came out publicly for Dewey. With banker Bard out of the picture as Undersecretary of the Navy, Forrestal figures he can then bring in banker Hensel as Assistant Secretary. Hensel already is chief of the Navy procurement legal division but wants a handle to his name.

DIPLOMATIC CHAFF

They have worn no uniform since Benjamin Franklin appeared as Ambassador to France in ordinary clothes, refused to don court dress and was the sensation of the French court. Franklin argued that he represented a nation of rebellious farmers, merchants and frontiersmen who believed more in democracy than in kingly fadrol.

Since then U. S. ambassadors have stuck to plain evening clothes, with gray-striped pants and cutaway in the afternoon.

Signs of Victory in Holland

Victory signs put up by townspeople of the Dutch city of Breda even before it was liberated from Nazi rule by Polish troops. The signs indicate that the Nazis' V-2 weapon will give way to the V-3 of the United Nations which will make a clean sweep of the war in Europe and complete freedom for its people.

Masters Become the Servants

These German civilians are being marched through Kunrade, Holland, to work on Dutch roads. They were formerly German guards over Dutch workers, who were forced to work for the Nazis. Now the Dutch do the guarding and the ex-masters do the working. This is typical of the liberated countries of Europe.

WORLD-WIDE CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

LESSON TEXT—John 17:18-23; I Corinthians 1:1-3; 12:4-7, 12, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one.—John 17:20, 21.

Unity among the believers in Christ is much talked about and desired by many in the church. They seek a single Christian communion in the world, or at least a gathering of all Protestant churches in one body. Such outward unity may be impossible to attain, and in fact might be quite undesirable if it did not express a unity of spirit and of true faith.

That fact, however, should not hinder us from seeking a world-wide fellowship of all believers of every race and creed in the unity of the Holy Spirit. The true church, the invisible body of Christ, is not divided, even though its members are scattered in many denominations.

We are reminded in our lesson that whatever else may be true about us, we (that is, all believers) are united in Christ. We are:

I. In the World—but in Christ (John 17:18-23).

Even as Christ was sent of the Father into the world to be the Light of the World, so we are here in the darkness of sin and sorrow to shine as lights for Him (Matt. 5:14-16). He did not pray that His disciples (and that includes us, v. 20) should be taken out of the world (v. 15) but that they should be kept from sin in the world.

So we are in the world. But let us never for a moment forget that though we are in the world we are also in Christ. He will give us—in fact He has given us—grace and glory so that we may represent Him in the world.

There is to be a oneness about believers (v. 21), not alone because of their good (blessed as that may be!), but in order that the world may know and believe in Christ (vv. 21, 23). The obvious corollary to that truth is that every evidence of division and friction between God's children is an opportunity and an excuse for the world to deny the truth of the gospel.

"Behold how these Christians love one another" was the baffled testimony of the pagan world in the early days of the Christian church. They could argue with their philosophy, and question their theology, but they had to admit that something had happened to these people which made them really love one another.

II. In the Church—but in Christ (I Cor. 1:1-3).

The church, even in its outward form of local assemblies and denominations, has a place of great importance in the world. One could certainly not find a more wonderful body of people nor more satisfying opportunity for service than that afforded by the church.

The ones to whom Paul addressed this letter were members of "the church of God which is at Corinth," but they were what is of infinitely greater importance, "saints"—those who had been sanctified, or set apart from this wicked world, in Christ Jesus.

This glorious distinction was not theirs alone, but belonged to "all that call upon the name of the Lord Jesus in every place" (v. 2). Here again we have that fellowship and unity in the love of Christ which transcends all other relationships and which ignores the boundaries of race, color, social position—yes, even of church membership.

No matter who or where another believer may be, Jesus Christ is "their Lord and ours" (v. 2). One could shout, "Hallelujah—Praise the Lord!" for such a delightful communion of all those who love Him.

III. In Service—but in Christ (I Cor. 12:4-7, 12, 13).

God has work to be done in the world. To accomplish that work, He gives diverse gifts to men. How wonderfully He endows and calls men and blesses them in His service! We can think of nothing more satisfying than to serve Him.

But even here we must keep in mind that the important thing is that we are not individual stars to shine in our solitary glory. No indeed, we are only a part of a great plan and purpose being carved out by "the same Lord" (v. 5). We are called, commissioned and sent by the one Holy Spirit (v. 7). We are "one body" (v. 12), baptized by the Holy Spirit into that blessed relationship, and it is that body of Christ which is at work in the world to do His will.

Nor does that in any way minimize the glory or the value of what we are called to do. On the contrary, it enhances our calling and encourages us to greater endeavor. We are not alone. We are in the Lord's service, yes; but first of all we are in Christ, and that means that we move forward with a great world-wide fellowship of those who have like precious faith.

HOMER
by CROY
© W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY THUS FAR: Amos Croy settled on a farm at Marysville, Missouri, where he married and a son, Homer, was born. Homer's earliest recollection was of a cyclone which blew down the sod barn and wrecked the orchard. Sunday meant church, company for dinner and steer weight guessing. Dehorning of the calves and the curing of hams were two of the jobs that Homer had to help with. It became his job to wean the calves. He originated the idea of placing a rubber tube in the milk pail and had them suck on that instead of his finger. By this means they were weaned considerably quicker than by finger. He sent the idea to the local farm paper which printed it in full.

CHAPTER VII

When the water was boiling, the scalding barrel set at the proper angle in the bobsled and everything was ready, Pa would go to the house and come out with his rifle and brass powder flask with the measuring device. "I expect you'd better go in the house for a while, Homer."

I was glad to, for I couldn't bear to see what was going to happen. . . .

Inside the house there was a tenseness, a lowering of voices. One of the women, who had come to help my mother, would look out the window and say, "They're in the hog lot now."

They would try to talk neighborhood news, but it would be in subdued voices and there'd be silences. Then my mother would begin to whet a knife on a crock. Suddenly, sharp and clear on the winter air, would come a shot . . . then the sound of a man running, and I would know he had a knife in his hand and it would seem to me I just couldn't live through the next few moments. There would be another shot, and another . . . three hogs now. Then there would be a feeling of relief, for we all knew this was the last. The women would begin to talk again, but a little too fast. I would open the door; the smell of powder would still be on the air.

The men would come dragging one of the hogs by the forelegs to the sled, and in a few moments the animal would be in the scalding water and the men would go "Hueh!" all together so as to get the right timing for the animal to slish up and down in the barrel. Pa would take some of the hair between his thumb and finger and give it a pull. "One more time, boys."

At last the animals would be dressed and hanging on the gambrels. The worst part of butchering would be over, for it didn't seem so bad now as it had when the hogs were alive and the men were advancing in the lot. The faintness I had felt would be gone and I'd be thinking about the good eating that was coming. And so'd everybody else. Lots of talk, now, about eating.

As the meat was being cut, the women would strip the casings, turn them inside out, scrape them, and put them to soak in salt water.

Sausage making was best of all. Mostly lean meat trimmed from the hams and shoulders and some from the tenderloin. When it was ready, the grinder would be brought and everybody would gather around, as if it was the opening of a circus. My mother was the one who fed the meat into the grinder and I was the one who had to turn the damned thing. On a chair, beside her, would be the salt and pepper in bowls, but the sage was in the bag it was cured in. My mother was proud of her ability to mix the seasonings just right. She knew the amount of sage to put in; if too much went in, it gave the sausage an old taste.

At last the day would be over, and the neighbors, each with a piece of fresh meat, would be starting home. The house, which had been so full of excitement, would seem lonely. Everywhere would be the peculiar, unpleasant smell of fresh meat.

The casings would be stacked in the pantry, so they wouldn't freeze, and I would forget about them. Then some morning, about two weeks later, as I would be coming back from helping with the chores there would be a perfectly captivating smell hanging on the air—the smell of frying sausage!

There would be Ma, when I opened the door, bending over the stove. She would take the lid off the skillet, turn the cakes over with a fork, then put the lid back on again. The smell would get more and more enthralling and I'd get hungrier and hungrier.

At last breakfast would be ready. There in the center of the table would be the redolent, brown cakes. We'd all take one—me pretty fast—and Ma would look at Pa and say, "How do you like it, Amos?" Pa would eat a moment, then say, "Fine! You got just about the right amount of seasoning." Then he'd look at me in that sly way of his and say, "Homer, do you think you'll be able to masticate a bit of it?"

After this first inspection, Ma would pass the buckwheat cakes and I would cut a slice of honey, spread it over the cakes and let it run down the sides. On top of this smoking mound I would put my sausage, then haul my knife across and mix sausage and buckwheat and honey all up together. I tell you it was good!

But that wasn't all. At noon that day when I opened up my dinner bucket at school there would be a package with grease spots showing through the brown paper—a delicious cold sausage cake. It wouldn't be as brown, and it wouldn't have the lovely smell it had at breakfast, but it was still good. It always would be good; nothing could keep it from being good. I wish I had some now—right this moment!

Newt Kennedy was our neighborhood correspondent for the weekly, and, for the items he sent in, he received the paper free of charge. Newt was a trifle weak on grammar, but he was strong on what people liked to read, and always, in everything he wrote, was this undercurrent of humor which I loved and which influenced me so much. He signed himself "The One-Horse Farmer," which, of course, made everybody laugh, for no one could run a farm with one horse. This was another way of saying "The Bottom of the Heap." Of course Newt wasn't, but it was good fun to pretend he was. Newt didn't merely send in who was sick and who was visiting and that tramps had broken in the schoolhouse again, but sent in comments and humorous philosophy. Each week, when we got the paper, the first thing I turned to was the One-Horse Farmer.

He was the biggest and strongest man in our section, and about the best natured. A great brawny giant with a mop of hair like an unfinished haystack. He wore an overcoat fastened around his middle with a belt; he had felt boots and overshoes and a cap with flaps that pulled down over his ears.

He did something of value to the township, for he conceived the idea we ought to have plays, and set about getting them up in the same joyous, boyish way he went into anything that had fun in it. These were put on in the Wilcox School which was bigger than the Knabb School. There was no door in the end of the room which was to be the stage, but that was all right; a window was used. The women made a curtain, and the boys and girls began to study their lines. When the time came, that wonderful opening night, Newt, all dressed up in his good clothes, stepped out in front of the draw-curtain and said the opening number would be a tableau entitled "The Setting Sun." The curtain whizzed along the galvanized clothes line and there, sitting on a box, was one of the neighborhood boys. It took us some moments to see through it, but when we did we thought it was about the funniest thing we'd ever heard of. Well, those plays were a tremendous success, judged by our standards, and brought us immense satisfaction.

Newt could be plenty serious. He would sit up with the sick and, in some strange way was amazingly tender with them, this rough giant of a man. When one of our neighbors died, Newt was the first person to put a shovel over his shoulder and start toward the cemetery.

The second time my name was ever in print, Newt Kennedy put it there. I tried to earn money for myself by having a line of traps in the slough, and one day I found a long, strange, perfectly white creature, as big around as a buggy whip handle, in a steel trap. The neighbors came in to see it.

When the One-Horse Farmer came out that week this item was in it: "Homer Croy has captured a white weasel."

I was delighted. I was thrilled! It had never occurred to me that I would be in the One-Horse Farmer, but there I was for all the world to see!

I thought over and over why he had used the word "captured" instead of "trapped," for I was coming more and more to love words; and to be a little awed by the thrilling things one could do with them.

As for the weasel, it must have been an albino. I took it down to Mr. Jenkins, who bought for a fur house in St. Louis, and sold it.

My father was a "cattle" farmer, Mr. Knabb was a "hog" farmer, Newt Kennedy was a "mule man," for even in our neighborhood we specialized. There were many other mule men, but none like Newt Kennedy, who got fun even out of mules.

Most farmers, when they wanted to "break" a mule, gingerly hitched him up with an old mare who could be got into a trot only by determined effort, and let the mule lunge and kick and prance beside the faithful old mare. But not Newt! Newt got his fun out of the very thing that others dreaded. He liked to break mules; more than that, he looked forward to mule-breaking time, as children do to circus time.

Fall was mule-breaking time; during the hiatus between harvest and corn picking. The mule colts had been on grass all summer, kicking up their heels and watching the horses and other mules plodding off to work. They'd run along beside, as near as the fence would allow, and whinny and taunt the dull plodders; at least, it seemed that way.

But these gay mules didn't know that Newt Kennedy would soon be on their trail. Newt would go bouncing along in a wagon, or on a hayframe, looking them over with a joyous eye. It wouldn't be long till he would have a nose-twitch on them.

Usually, when a farmer wanted to break a mule, he would take him to the back pasture so he could swing on a line and make him run in a circle. But nothing so common as this would do for Newt Kennedy.

When it began to chill up in the autumn, he would say to me, "Homer, are you going to be doing anything Thursday morning?"

I never was, if Newt wanted me.

It was understood I was to say nothing to anyone, for Newt's mule methods were frowned on. They might like him fifty-one weeks a year, but mule-breaking week they had no use at all for him.

I would go out the back way, so as to appear to be about my work (a suspicious item) and cut across the fields to Newt's. I could see the mules even before I got there, for they would be running around in the barn lot, the wildest things on four legs, and the trickiest. And the smartest, too, for a mule is miles ahead of a horse in horse sense. It really ought to be called "mule sense."

"I thought maybe you'd like to help me break," he would say and we would go to the horse lot where the mules were racing around and around with their heads as high as giraffes. Newt would stand there, his arms on the fence, looking them over, as a fisherman might look over a trout he was going to have his way with.

The thing was to get a rope around the neck of one of them. Newt would approach with a rope held behind him, and suddenly send it looping through the air, like a cowboy. If the rope landed, it was hell. Newt and I would have to sink our heels in the ground and hang on for dear life. Of course the mule couldn't go out of the lot, so we would stand in the middle, like a ringmaster at a circus, and let the mule run 'round and 'round.

After a time we'd get him into a chute that Newt had for the purpose and leave him, as Newt said, to "think it over," and then go back for another mule. This one usually would be in harness and considered partly broken. Newt would not have dreamed of putting an old plug-ugly plow horse in to break a mule with. Newt wanted to get fun out of his work.

After a time we'd have the partly broken second mule in, and snubbed; then we'd go back to the first mule and Newt would pretend he loved that mule. He'd stroke his nose and talk to him in honeyed words, but Newt had something behind his back. The twitch. This was a stick as long as a person's arm, with a loop of rope at the end. Newt would get the loop over the mule's upper lip and twist it tight, and pass the stick to me. The mule's head would go down and his heels up. But usually I could hold him, in spite of all the ideas he had on the subject. Newt would creep up with a collar and slip it over his neck. Bit by bit he would get the harness on the mule and then the harness on the second mule. Then would come the tremendous job of getting the mules to a wagon tongue. Only Newt could do that, sometimes with soothing words; sometimes with threats that, if he had understood them, would have made the mule's blood turn to ice water.

In some superhuman way, Newt would get both those mules on a wagon and then I would be sent to open the gate to the public road! No back pasture for Newt. Some of the neighbors even broke mules on plowed ground hitched to a drag. But not Newt Kennedy. He wanted to extract every possible morsel of fun from it. Fun that made the neighbors think he was crazy.

11 Yanks Rescue 81 Kids Trapped In No-Man's Land

'Baby Patrol' Volunteers Are Cited for Heroism in a Dangerous Mission.

WITH THE U. S. 35TH INFANTRY DIVISION IN FRANCE.—"I'll go, I have three kids at home myself," the sergeant said. Nine others stepped forward as volunteers.

Theirs was a dangerous and an unusual mission. They were going on a "baby patrol" to rescue 81 French children trapped in a chateau in no-man's land.

A civil affairs officer, Capt. George L. Schneider, former Brooklyn, N. Y., lawyer, had received word from the French that in a chateau near the town of Hants there were 81 children, aged two to six, who had been sent there by their parents from Nancy as a place of safety. But the path of war headed right for the children.

Kids in Line of Attack.

The Americans had to capture Hants in order to keep their position in a near-by town. Schneider notified the commanding American officer of the children's situation, and the colonel promised to do his best to avoid the chateau in the attack.

Schneider went to Company A of the 134th regiment and asked for volunteers to enter the town behind the American patrols. They were to reach the chateau and escort the children to safety. That was when the 10 men stepped forward.

It was a damp, cold night when the "baby patrol" reached the battle area about 9 p. m. Each man understood he would have to carry two babies and guide the others.

The patrol reached the chateau without being fired on. Each man placed a baby under each arm and grouped others who could toddle around him and started back. They moved about 40 yards apart and had to stop for rest frequently so that the children could keep up with them.

Nazis Open Fire.

The Germans spotted the party and cut loose with artillery and mortars.

Each man, with his arms full of children, could do nothing but squat for a moment and then move slowly on.

It was a long thousand yards back to their lines. The men had to hand the children over a small creek one by one before reaching the truck that rushed them to Nancy.

Despite the wet, cold ground and their lack of shoes, to say nothing of their fright at being with strange men and at the bursting artillery shells, not one of the children so much as cried.

Not one child or volunteer was hurt.

Recently the captain and 10 enlisted men were awarded the bronze star—but only five were on hand to receive it. The enlisted men included Sgt. William F. Moore, Farwell, Mich.

Baby Girl Saves Mother From Serving in Jail

OMAHA. — A soldier, wearing sergeant's stripes and holding a baby, walked up to the judge's bench in Omaha police court during a recess.

"Say," he said, "this baby isn't mine. I was just holding her while her mother's case was up. The judge sent her mother to jail. What am I going to do with her?"

The prosecutor shrugged his shoulders. Others about the bench were equally puzzled. The baby started to cry.

"Well, somebody's got to take her," the soldier said. "I just sat down over there and the mother asked me to hold her."

The police matron finally took the pink, chubby cheeked year-old-girl, who gurgled happily.

"Boy, you've got her now; she's yours," the soldier said and strode from the courtroom.

The judge solved the problem by calling the 28-year-old attractive mother back to the bench and suspending her five day sentence on a charge of stealing $33 from a neighbor's house.

Victim of Flood Gives Birth to Baby on Roof

MEXICO CITY.—Flood workers related that a woman gave birth to a child while marooned with her husband, their dog and their turkey gobbler atop the roof of their farm home 25 miles from Vera Cruz.

The workers, who did not give the couple's name, said that when rescuers reached the roof the dog leaped with joy, the gobbler flapped its wings, and the woman said, "Be careful. There is a coral snake up here with us, also a flood victim."

All left by canoe except the snake.

Youngster, 9, Has Time Shopping With $52 Wad

KANSAS CITY, MO.—A young girl on a shopping spree is nothing new—unless the enthusiastic shopper is only 9 years old and is shopping with $52 which she found on a table in an apartment near the child care center where she was supposed to be staying. Such was the case here recently. The lass spent $12.65 for articles for herself, purchased a doll and some clothes for a little boy she knew and had only $17.71 when found.

Grease glass baking dishes before putting food in to bake and they will be easier to wash.

Cover discolored ceilings with a solution of thick starch. Let it dry and then brush off—and the marks, too!

Leather shoes that are difficult to polish should be rubbed over with a cut lemon. They will shine beautifully afterwards.

If the whisks of your broom are worn so short that they no longer give clean service, cut all the sewing threads except the top row. Then when the straws become too short a second time, cut the top row of stitches and resew closer to the handle, using a fine wire if no needle is at hand.

"Our Golden Wedding last week, but we didn't want our pictures in the paper . . . just as if it were an accomplishment for a couple to get along so many years together. We've known a fairly heavy sprinkling of worry, and that may have been a blessing. It made us need each other. Being needed also sweetens and sharpens memory."
